MURDER OF CROWS TAROT

YOUR JOURNEY AMONG THE CROWS BEGINS...

You awaken on a strange shore. Before you lies a land of mist and intrigue. In places, it is a treacherous and desolate wasteland. Let your gaze penetrate the mist and you will find a dreamscape filled with wonders. On this journey your constant companions are a murder of crows. Black winged and cunning, these are the extraordinary messengers of the Other World. They answer to unseen powers. Their croaks and caws convey great wisdom. Their farseeing eyes pierce the vast distances of time and the far reaches of space. Nothing is hidden from them for long. If you follow where they lead, your adventure will transform you inside and out.

LISTENING TO THE WISDOM OF THE CROWS

This deck is a gateway to a world of depths and distances, strange and captivating, far different than our mundane experiences.

Begin with your question. What do you most wish to explore? In what area of your life do you most need guidance and wisdom?

Consider your question as you shuffle the cards. Lay them out before you, and consider the visions each presents, one by one. Set aside your superficial hopes and fears as you let the images draw you deeper. When you read the guided visualizations in this book, allow your spirit to be transported into this mysterious realm, as shamans have done since the beginning of time. See the landscape, feel it, taste the air of this new and captivating place. Consider the words of the guidebook, knowing they are only an inspiration to spark your own mystic vision so you can awaken the power within you. Allow the words of truth to come to you. In your hands, truth is a key to unlock whatever gates and doors emerge before you.

When you return to the waking realm and resume your life path, take note whenever you see a crow. Stop and consider the message they share with you. Draw cards from your deck and return to this wild place between the worlds.

STRUCTURE OF THE TAROT

The traditional Tarot pack is divided into five parts. The 22 cards of the Major Arcana represent the great archetypes you will most likely recognize: The Fool, The Lovers, Death, and others. These cards point to powerful inner and outer forces influencing your life and alert you to areas of potential transformation.

The 56 cards of the Minor Arcana are divided into four suits, each with ten numbered cards and four court cards. The numbered cards (ace through ten) indicate day to day concerns and activities and highlight actions you can take for your greatest and highest good.

THE MAJOR ARCANA

These cards represent the greater powers and archetypes of the Tarot. Many of the images will already be familiar to you thanks to their frequent appearances in films, television shows and literature: Death, The Lovers, The Fool, The Hanged Man, The World.

In a reading, the cards of the Major Arcana reveal the potential for profound personal transformation. They indicate areas where there is more going on than meets the eye. What might seem at first to be a surface issue has deeper roots. Some readers refer to these cards as the 22 Keys. If Fate has placed a door before you that you are unsure how to pass through, these keys will suggest the inner and outer change that will grant you safe passage.

THE SUITS OF THE MINOR ARCANA

Cups depict the Realm of Dreams, ruled by the element of water. Here the heart may break and can be healed so that it can be refilled and become stronger than before. Here many companions wait to join you on your journey. Cups ask you to be aware of the emotional implications of the reading. When you find yourself in the Realm of Dreams, ask “What are the characters depicted in this card feeling? What am I feeling?”

Pentacles depict the Realm of Greed, ruled by the element of earth. Many resources lie within and beneath the rich soil of this place. They wait to be found and shaped to benefit you in your tasks. Pentacles ask you to take stock of your assets and what you are trying to manifest. When you find yourself in the Realm of Greed, ask “What are the characters depicted in this card creating? What do I wish to create?”

Wands depict the Realm of Growth, ruled by the element of fire. This is a place of unexplored potential, of adventures waiting to be undertaken by those with the courage to clear away the biting vines and vicious thorns. Wands give you signs of how to use your energy and willpower. When you find yourself in the Realm of Growth, ask “What do the characters depicted in this card desire? What do I desire?”

Swords depict the Realm of Riddles, ruled by the element of air. This is an intellectually confusing and deadly place, but those with a swift mind and keen perception will act quickly, escape the mental traps and bring back the treasures they need. Swords ask you to make good use of your mental powers and carefully consider your choices. When you find yourself in the Realm of Riddles, ask “What do the characters depicted in this card believe they know? What do I believe that I know?”

THE COURTS OF THE TAROT

Each suit of the Minor Arcana contains four court cards. They are the Page, Knight, Queen and King. The people depicted on these cards each have their own unique personality and can represent people in your life who are connected to your question, or they may denote facets of your own personality. For example, the Knight of Wands could be an adventurous person in your circle, or might be your own inner adventurous spirit longing for attention. Your intuition will guide you to the most appropriate meaning for each card.

Pages are just starting out on a new path to understand the energy of their suit. They desire to learn and grow. When a Page appears, a youthful spirit and an open mind may be beneficial to you.

Knights have learned enough to finally strike out on their own to directly experience the energy of their suit. They move quickly taking risks and making discoveries in the field. When the Knight appears it asks you to dare to push yourself beyond your own limitations.

Queens have attained a powerful inner mastery of the energy of their suit. They have distilled great wisdom from and have integrated it completely into their own life. When the Queen appears, she asks you consider your greatest skills and talents and how to make good use of them.

Kings have acquired a great outer mastery of the energy of their suit. They are skilled leaders, adept at directing others in this area. When a King appears, it may indicate an opportunity for you to demonstrate your leadership.

There are many venerable traditions about gender and the court cards. Commonly Pages are thought of as girls or young women, Knights as boys and young men, Queens as adult women and Kings as adult men. Over the decades, many readers have released previously held gender associations from the cards and focused more on the unique energy of each member of the courts. This is especially true when the cards are used to represent facets of a person's personality. A reading can very easily ask a man to be aware of his inner Page of Cups or suggest to a woman that she may embrace her own inner King of Swords.

HOW DOES TAROT WORK?

The Tarot is a powerful tool in the hands of the diviner, fortune-teller and seeker of wisdom. When you shuffle the cards and deal them out, you enter into conversation with the universe and the spiritual forces that guide it.

In the lore of many lands, crows are special emissaries that carry messages between our world and the Other World. The crows are tricksters who will make you work hard for their blessings, but they are also powerful creators who can bring you many blessings when you have earned their trust.

FORMING THE QUESTION

To learn what you need to know, carefully consider your question. It must be a question you truly believe it is possible to answer. For those just beginning their journey with the cards, helpful questions include:

- What do I most need to know about this situation at this time?
- What will happen if I pursue this path?
- How can I succeed at this task?

SPREADS

Once you decide upon your question, you will need to choose a layout for the reading. Spreads are essential for helping you discern the meaning of a particular reading. Without a spread in mind, looking at the cards can feel muddled and confusing.

THE DAILY DRAW

As you are getting to know your deck, pull one card from it at random each morning and note your impressions of it. Consider what events you have planned that this card may be offering you insights into. At the end of the day return to the card you pulled, think back on all that has transpired and ask yourself whether any new wisdom or insights come to mind when looking at the card.

THREE CARD SPREADS

Most stories have a beginning, a middle and an end. Among new and experienced Tarot readers alike, three card spreads are very common. Some of the more universally used varieties include:

- Past – Present – Future
- Situation – Challenge – Solution
- Present situation – Choice 1 – Choice 2

COUNTING CROWS SPREAD

There are many traditions linking birds to prophecy and fortune telling. “One for Sorrow” is an old British divination nursery rhyme about the superstitious counting of magpies (a member of the crow family) and letting the number of birds indicate the person’s fate. The following seven-card spread was specially designed for use with the Murder of Crows Tarot with this rhyme in mind.

One for sorrow: The challenge you face.

Two for mirth: What you can gain by facing it.

Three for a funeral: Something you must let go of.

Four for a birth: Something new entering your life.

Five for rich: Resources that can help you.

Six for poor: Forces working against your success.

Seven for a witch, I can tell you no more: The key action that will bring the needed transformation.

THE TALE OF THE CROW

An Immersive Approach to Storytelling with the Cards

As you set out on this path of seeing into worlds beyond this one, the sheer breadth and enormity of the Tarot tradition can feel overwhelming. With 78 distinct cards, each with its own complicated mix of meanings that you must then set into careful diagrams that add new layers of complexity - this undertaking is no small task.

But there is more than one doorway onto this rich realm, with its many hidden depths. The Tarot cards have been employed as a storytelling device since their inception as a playing card game in the fourteenth century. For the moment set aside all the lists of meanings, elemental associations and the like and just begin a conversation between yourself and your personal deck of cards.

You may elect to begin with a question, though it might be best to take a more open approach at first. Shuffle the cards, clear your thoughts of any particular preconceived ideas about what the reading will say, take a breath and state “Once, there was a crow...”

Turn over the first card and, before your agile, conscious mind is allowed to take over, say the first thing that comes to your lips. Spin forth a narrative based only on your reaction to the image before you. The stranger the tale, the more it diverges from the well-worn tracks of plot structure the better. Allow the scene to belong only to itself and chronicle it for an audience of one.

When the story needs to take a turn, flip over the next card and allow the tale to continue with new characters and new situations. Keep on telling the story as long as you can remain in flow and when you sense that you have reached the final chapter allow yourself to come to a close.

It is likely that when you began telling the story you left the original question behind but return to it now. Think about the saga you have just invented and see where its points might in some way match your own life. Which characters in the story were you, which were those around you? What surprising twists and turns could in some way be a message meant especially for you? Lay the cards out before you in a line and revisit the first chapter with fresh eyes. By the time you have concluded the story again, one clear message should speak to you, giving the knowledge you need in a way that would never have been possible if you had forced yourself to adhere only to the accepted structure of the Tarot.

This technique can be of great use to you when you are divining for another person and the reading leaves you perplexed and uncertain of what to say next. Turn to the querent and ask them to tell you the story they see in the cards. You may be amazed by how the tale they tell sparks new insights for you and provides the missing piece that kept your reading from achieving the necessary flow.

JOURNEYING TO THE REALM OF THE INNER SHADOW

“Until you make the unconscious conscious, it will direct your life and you will call it fate.”

Carl Gustav Jung

Within all of our psyches, can be found distinct forces that guide and direct us in all our thoughts and actions. Our indwelling guides help us to examine memories, understand emotions and plan for a greater future. One dark guest, however, can send a shiver up our spines and cause us to turn our heads so that we might not be forced to see them. This feared and misunderstood being is called The Shadow. It is their unwelcome task to be the caretaker of all the parts of ourselves we reject or have been taught to suppress. Anything that is too uncomfortable to acknowledge sinks down into the unconscious where it merges with this vast stygian being who lingers beneath the surface.

The Shadow is not evil; it does not wish you any harm. It is just one more part of you and the more you can come to understand it, the less power it will have to exert to make you aware of all the things you are trying to hide from. Think back on those times when something caused you to unexpectedly react in sudden anger or pain. These are the signs that the Shadow is attempting to guide you to self-reflection.

This Tarot deck can be a powerful ally in your exploration of the realms of the Shadow. This is not an easy path to follow and you would do well to take your time, go slowly and only face as much as you are prepared to. Little by little your friendship with your Shadow will form. It is wise to surround yourselves with those who love you as you plumb these depths; they will be your anchor to the waking world. When the tides seem to rise too high and you begin to feel overwhelmed, put this work away for a cycle of the moon so that you may begin again refreshed.

If possible, begin this work on the night of the dark moon, when the silver orb falls under the Earth's shadow. Place the cards before you and try to relax, focusing on your breath and the pulse of your life. Unwelcome thoughts may try to intrude; just acknowledge them and allow them to float away. Clearly state your intention for meeting your Shadow. Affirm that this meeting should bring truth, understanding and healing. Shuffle the cards and in your mind's eye imagine that a doorway stands before you. See the doorway open onto a place of diffused light and swirling mists. Through the doorway steps your reflection. Observe them, see how they appear and behave and try to withhold any judgements. This is but one part of you. After you have mixed the cards in whatever way you wish, fan them out in a line. Pass your non-dominant hand over them slowly. Imagine that your reflection gives a gentle nod or gesture as your hand pauses over certain cards. Allow the reflection to select three cards for you in this way. Place the cards in a line and regard them as coolly as possible.

These cards represent facets of your Shadow. Contained within these images are parts of yourself that you have denied. Here you will see strengths you were told it is not healthy for you to have, passions you have instructed yourself to deny, joys you have consigned to darkness without ever realizing it, and great terrors that you fear could one day rule over you. It is very probable that the images before you will also depict traits and actions you deeply dislike in others. It is natural to project our own insecurities onto others around us.

When you are ready, separate one card from the others, placing it at the center of the table. Drink in the image until you can clearly see it with your eyes closed. Imagine that your spirit flies forth on the wings of a crow to the scene depicted in the card. See characters move, hear them speak and ask yourself “When have I felt this way?” Ask yourself “When have I been uncomfortable seeing this in others?” Ask yourself “What do I fear will happen if this energy is allowed fully into my life?”

When you have absorbed enough information allow your crow’s wings to lift you up and deliver you to the scene depicted in the next card and repeat your interrogation of the images you find there. Repeat again with the third card.

At this point you may experience feelings of heaviness. Seeing these parts of ourselves that we have kept secret is not an easy thing. Take several deep, cleansing breaths and allow your spirit to soar back to your body.

Fan the cards before you again and now, with your dominant hand allow yourself to choose one more card. This card will be your guide in transforming the energies you have just experienced within your shadow. Turn it over before you and spend a few moments gazing at it until you can clearly see it in your mind's eye. Let the black wings lift you up once more, spiriting you away to encounter this final image. The beings in this card will show you what you can do, now that you have become more aware of the secrets that live within you. They will show you how to release all of that powerful energy that has remained hidden. This energy can now be put to good use in your own transformation. Do not be afraid if the images show pain or fear; these indicate the pains and fears you are advised to address first and the mysteries of the Tarot and your own intuition will reveal a path for you. Once you feel you understand what actions you may take to heal and integrate the shadow allow the black wings to spring for from your back once more. They are stronger than they were before, their feathers glistening with a new light. To engage in this deep work of understanding The Shadow brings you power you might not have known you possess.

Record your impressions and experiences in your Tarot journal. You may wish to return to this passage and begin this process again when the moon is once again shrouded in darkness.

THE LORE OF THE CROW

The crow holds a special place in sacred stories from around the world. No creature is as mysterious or perhaps misunderstood as the crow and their close cousin the raven.

The crow's black wings and its habit of dining on dead flesh have led many to regard the regal bird as an ill omen. Many a soldier on the eve of battle held great fear in their heart at the thought that on the morrow they too might be another feast for the crows.

There are those who claim that a crow met in the cemetery is the spirit of one you have lost, returned to you with a message of great import.

But the crow's connection to the deceased is only one facet of the rich traditions, mythologies and superstitions ascribed to the wild and wily bird.

For some Native American tribes, the crow is venerated for, above all else, its keen intelligence. Among these tribes, to see a crow was not an ill omen, but a blessing. In one story, when the world was frozen in the depths of winter, the crow was chosen to fly to the heavens to bargain on behalf of humanity with the Creator for warmth. Its wonderful voice was persuasive and the crow was allowed to plunge a stick into the sun, returning to mankind with this fiery brand like Prometheus. During its flight down to earth, the flames blackened the crow's wings forever - a reminder of what it had done and suffered to bring heat and life to humanity.

In ancient Greece, the crow was a sacred ally of the god Apollo in his aspect as the giver of divination and prophecy. He sent the birds far and wide to bring his knowledge and wisdom... and to spy on his lovers when he suspected they might be unfaithful. It is for this reason that Apollo's priests took great care in their observation of the crow and other birds; knowing that these winged messengers carried the answers they sought from their god.

The crow is a masterful survivor as many world mythologies will affirm. They are renowned in the lore of many lands for their ability to survive great destruction. This can also be seen in their prominent role in post-apocalyptic cinema where, after many other creatures have died out, a great murder of crows (the folk name given to a flock of the birds) can be seen taking to the skies over a broken wasteland.

The crow is also a celebrated trickster in many tales. They plot and play games on other animals, nearly always victorious in any battle of wits. When you watch the great joy crows take in flight and play you will understand where this reputation comes from.

These sacred tales and beliefs are keys to understanding your ally the crow but you must also learn to rely on your own observations and intuition. Seek out the places where these birds live. Watch them in their natural habitat and open your mind, setting aside what you think you know. Allow the crow to tell you its own story and reveal its own secrets.

Armed with both the collected wisdom of the ages and your own unique insights the crow will be a powerful ally for you. Its fervent intelligence, its knack for survival, its connection to other worlds beyond our own - all these things may be yours if you will open your mind and your heart to the crow. Gender is widely regarded as more fluid than it was in the days when the first Tarot writers set down their meanings.

After all, when you see a crow can you immediately determine if it is male or female?

THE TAROT AS A TOOL OF SPELLCRAFT

Those who become well versed in the meanings of the Tarot cards and their use in divination can easily incorporate the deck into their own personal magical practices. Spellcasters throughout time have made use of symbols carved in stone or written on paper as talismans intended to benefit them or their loved ones, to bring them what they need and to protect them from all harm. The talisman's power relies in the connection the caster makes with the symbols depicted on it.

Crows are renowned for their connection to magic and spells and in many lands it has been said that wizards, witches and shamans can take the form of crows when they are pursuing their desires. Crows are very often thought of as magical familiars or totems spirits and therefore they make an ideal ally for you in this endeavor.

If you would make use of the cards in this way then first consider what it is you desire to bring into your life. As the old saying goes, "Be careful what you wish for, you might just get it." Consider what result would be of the greatest and highest good for yourself and those around you. And, of course, perform a reading with the cards to determine if this is right for you at this time.

Once you know what it is you wish to achieve with your spell, spend some time looking at each card one by one and considering whether it exudes the energy you are calling to yourself. If you desire that a new love should come into your life consider The Lovers and any cards that depict the type of person you are seeking (it is wise that you use your magical gifts to bring a new love into your life rather than changing the mind of someone you know). If you are pursuing a career change, think of what cards indicate the success you hope for. Narrow your selection down to no more than three cards. For each card, create a one-sentence affirmation that describes you having what you seek in the present tense “I am deeply loved”, “I am successful in my career”, “I am protected and safe,” etc.

Select a night when you can be alone and undisturbed. If you are calling something into your life, choose a night of the waxing moon. If you are banishing something from your life choose a night of the waning moon instead. Set up a space that feels magical to you. Bedeck it with candles, scents, crystals and colors that correspond to your desired goal (research on these correspondences can easily be found in books on natural magic). And of course you will want to include an image of your magical ally the crow very prominently.

Take whatever steps you can to enter into a calm and collected mood. Warm baths and soft music are ideal for this. Cleanse and purify your space with a consecratory incense such as sage, palo santo, myrrh or sandalwood. Place your chosen cards face down on your working area or altar. Meditate to clear your mind and visualize deep roots growing down from within your feet into the ground connecting you to the vast power of Mother Earth. See branches grow out of your head and into the stars, connecting you with the celestial realms. When you feel that you are in union with the benevolent powers above and below you are ready to begin. Turn over the first Tarot card and reveal its image. Imagine yourself as the figures depicted on the card. Feel their energies fill your body and your mind. See yourself having that which you seek. This is an important distinction. Don't visualize yourself meeting someone you will love, see yourself as being established in a relationship. Allow the vision of the card to fill you completely. Drumming, dancing, rhythmic breathing can all help you achieve this heightened state but the most important thing is feeling that you have embodied the image of the card. When you can no longer contain the energy within you, clearly state the affirmation you wrote for that card and see the words leave your mouth transformed into a beautiful crow with glistening black wings. Continue this with the next card and the next, releasing each affirmation as a spirit crow that circles above your head. When the final bird has been released, see them all circle faster and faster until they shoot forth from this space into the universe to carry out your magical will. When this happens, state with great authority "As I will, so mote it be!"

Take some time to relax and consider what you just experienced. Eating food will help you ground your energy but you might also wish to place your hands or even forehead upon the floor, visualizing any extra energy from the spell seeping out of you and returning to Mother Earth. In the following days, whenever you think about the magical working, visualize the cards and repeat your affirmation.

For a miniature version of this working, especially useful when someone tells you about a challenge they are experiencing and you wish to truly send them “thoughts and prayers” take a few moments to sit gazing at a card whose energy will be useful to them and speak an affirmation on their behalf. See your words become a crow, speeding off to aid those in need.

MEANINGS AND KEYWORDS

These meanings are signposts to help you find your way as you explore this fantastical world. Here is one process you might use to let the text guide you in your journey among the crows.

1. Begin by reading the description.
2. Close your eyes and picture yourself entering the scene depicted on the card in your mind's eye.
3. Encounter the characters you see in the cards and become aware of what you see and how you feel.
4. Let your own answer bubble up from within.

All cards have both positive and negative aspects. The meanings given here contain both. You must use the position meanings, the surrounding cards and your own insights to determine the meanings meant for you in each reading. This can be challenging at first but the more you practice the easier it will become.

REVERSALS

Reading reversals is a somewhat advanced technique by which the diviner gains additional insight by shuffling the cards so that many of them are turned upside down. If you “bridge shuffle” this process is as easy as turning over half the cards each time you cut them to shuffle again. The Murder of Crows Tarot was created so that you may explore the mysterious realms of an ethereal world, meeting its unusual inhabitants and finding its secrets. For this reason, reversed meanings are not given for each card as this process will be much easier for you if the characters are not all standing on their heads.

With that said, if you do wish to learn more about the process of reading with reversals there are different traditions you may wish to try out.

- Read the reversals as an indication that the energy of the card is blocked in this situation. As an example, a card indicating celebration, when reversed, may indicate that the querent is resisting their urge to celebrate and holding themselves back.
- Read the reversals as an inner experience and an upright card as an outer experience.
- Read the reversals as an indication that there is an opportunity for healing in this area.
- Read the reversals as the “opposite” of the given meaning for the card. For example, a card about taking a new path, when reversed, might indicate you should not take that path at this time.

- Read the reversals as a sign that the Shadow, a part of the psyche that seeks to sabotage us or repress uncomfortable feelings may be at work.

In order to keep this process as clear as possible, before shuffling the deck, decide upon which system of reversals you will make use of.

A NOTE CONCERNING MASKS

Many of the denizens of this spectral realm have hidden their features behind dark masks cleverly shaped to resemble the beaked face of a crow. While such a mysterious visage may seem disconcerting at first, there is more to these creatures than meets the eye. In our own world, these masks were once donned by those medical practitioners who specialized in treating persons afflicted with the plague known as The Black Death as it made raged across Europe. The masks allowed them to keep a safe distance from their patient and the beak could be stuffed with healing herbs that were purported to keep the plague doctors safe from the disease's deadly miasma while they treated their patients. However, among these healers were many charlatans that preyed upon the weak and weary, selling false cures. This means, dear traveler, you must be cautious as you journey through this realm and come into contact with these strange figures. Not everyone you will meet in the cards is an ally and you must learn to trust your intuition when determining who is a friend and who is a foe.

THE MAJOR ARCANA

0. The Fool – It begins with a cry in the darkness, the first herald of a lonesome journey. The trail unrolls itself before you through unfamiliar terrain. Here and now you can be exactly who you say you are. Your first step is imminent and it cannot be retaken. Heed the bird's warning. Allow its full-throated cry to echo before you, calling the path ahead out of the smoke and mire. Set yourself into motion even though the second and third steps remain uncertain.

Keywords: The call of the unknown, the step yet untaken, human frailty.

I. The Magician – The in-drawn breath becomes the exhalation. Now is the time for the words of power. You speak your mind and your wishes become truths. The powers of insight, healing, will, and connection obey your command and what you envision becomes a new reality. The elemental powers are in balance, there at your fingertips to help you shape and change your reality. Draw their power into yourself, decide that you belong here, believe it of yourself that you have earned this place. Keywords: Strength of will, manifestation, use of magic words, manipulation.

II. High Priestess – They croak and cry all about you, hemming you in and feathering their nests with bits and pieces they steal from you. Dim the outer lights and let the ordinary senses become dulled. Shut them out entirely. Pour yourself into the silence that pools around you in the silver light of the moon. Drift down past dreams, hopes and desires - releasing them as you submerge - until you reach the center, until you comprehend the truth.

Keywords: Looking within, donning the shroud of wisdom, shedding the pretense of obvious opinions, contemplation of many possibilities.

III. Empress – A haunting lullaby calls from out of the darkness. It speaks to you of safety and security, a mother's eternal and unyielding love. A hand takes your hand, bearing you up against the coming storm. Her lips kiss your forehead and leave a mark protecting you in your journey through the night. You were born from her egg, as were all who live. There is healing to be found in her kindness-- just be careful not to drown in it.

Keywords: Nurturing, self-care, sensuality, love and loyalty, compassion for all, fertility and prosperity, motherhood, smothering and obsessive behavior.

IV. Emperor – A firm hand takes your shoulder and ushers you to the high seat of power. The clouds part and you can see a vast dominion. Nothing escapes his attention. One eye sees the surface of all things while the other sees the hidden truths, the normally invisible depths. Crows wheel above him, bringing the messages that he needs to govern his domain. His mind is steel, his words are iron and his judgement is forever. He receives counsel for good and ill. His years of leadership allow him to know the difference.

Keywords: Rule of law, good governance, wise advice, leadership and political acumen, fatherhood, authoritarianism and ruthlessness.

V. Hierophant – Bells of bronze sing out between the mountains and over the valleys of this strange land, calling the faithful to attend to what is needful. A cathedral soars before you, strong, imposing and ancient beyond memory. Within its halls the mysteries are made plain. A narrow door opens out upon the world and a robed man stands in your path. To submit is to be made worthy, to join the choir of fellowship and sing the ancient hymns. The only path into this hallowed hall requires going through this pious guardian.

Keywords: Traditional values, conservative approaches, submit to a higher power, gatekeeping, the voice of Heaven, cooperate, earn your place, dogmatic approaches.

VI. Lovers – At long last, weary of wandering, you see that you are not in fact alone on this road. Another soul searches through this strange land for meaning and redemption. The choice is before you, a decision of great consequence. To eat of the fruit of the sacred tree will bring your hearts into alignment, and your paths will join. The dark angel lifts its wings above you both, giving its sincere blessing. Your hand hesitates beneath the branches. Are you ready to bite into the flesh that will erase loneliness of independence? The juice on their lips smells sweet and inviting.

Keywords: A chance for union, draw strength from passion, find your missing half, choice between two paths, companionship and romance, dependence.

VII. Chariot – In this new world of doubt and fear you cannot remain small and hidden forever. The time has come to choose to rise above and be more than you have been. Step into the cart and you can fly faster and farther, all you need do is hang on for dear life. Bring the chaotic strands together and weave them into the harness that will fuel your travels. Harness power, put on the mask you wish to present the world.

Keywords: Victory, movement and travel, vehicles, power over others, exert control over the external world, conquest, vengeance.

VIII. Strength – You can sense and feel the changes within you more than you can see them. Your trials in this wasteland have made you strong. And what is to come requires that you be stronger than you have ever been. You hear the rumbles of your power deep within; your greatest adversary cannot escape. Your unending strength dwells in your mind, your heart, your blood. It scratches at its bonds, ready to tear and rend and devour. It can never be silenced - there's no need to even try. It can listen. It can be cajoled. It can be loved. This task will take all your reserves but after all, it's what you have been preparing for.
